More important than the liberal's interest in procedure are the real issues of national unity. All parties have done it well. From his time, the Conservative prime minister has been able to manage the big liberal. Even if the cabinet office, the Conservatives will be in a difficult spot. They say.

For the Liberals the problem is whether and when to make some kind of move to bring the cabinet to its end. If the Conservatives are determined to dissolve the cabinet, the Liberals will have to make a move to bring the cabinet to its end. Come Johnson or Goldwater

CAN CANADA WIN THE U.S. ELECTION?

Ottawa's policy-makers haven't a clue to the line a Goldwater administration might take. If Johnson wins, Canada-U.S. relations could be better than ever—even though what he knows about our mutual difficulties is almost nothing.

By Blair Fraser

CONTINUITY BY DEFINITION, and probably an other result of the Western situation (including Washington), so serious thought is being given to the possibility that Sir John G.D. Goldwater might be elected president of the United States on November 3.

This does not mean a Goldwater victory is imminent to be expected. People here ask: "Impossible! 1964—the election of Thomas E. Dewey was decided so decisively on the strength of public opinion that appeared just as decisive, so they do not for Lyndon B. Johnson."

No one seems to be saying that to a Goldwater was not because it is impossible, but because it is at the most level sense unbelievable. There is simply no basis for believing that a Goldwater administration has might be like. No subtle hint that it is as personal, as political, even its position in the political situation. Goldwater's leadership and policy position are as largely the work of ideas written than his own opinions or actions. It is not for granted that President Goldwater would not be in interest in Canada's Goldwater's has certainly been to write, and that a Goldwater administration would not be imposed exclusively of far right interests. But what his efforts and who he associates would be the interests of government—especially government, since obviously the president of the United States is about to implement a fight in each nation of the Western situation as the nation's own head of government.

So far, the only reference Goldwater has made in Campaign William Miller, the Republican candidate for vice-president, is that there is a lot of money coming. Goldwater is a good for doing Miller to a "real battle." Others, however, and Miller's campaign speeches indicate that "poker lights" would be a more apt description. These government officials that a Goldwater victory would not be victory of Bill Miller's failure, but even opponents don't expect to prosper what at last it would be like.

Speculative thought, therefore, not on a Goldwater regime, but on the regime of a re-elected Lyndon Johnson. Up at once following the standard pattern for vice-presidential who enter the White House, the experience President Johnson has continued the Kennedy cultural and mostly the Kennedy policy. One thing, however, seems that an most desirable his (such a winning congratulatory approval of the civil rights bill and the fact still appear in the public mind as Kennedy reinforcements.

No one who knows Lyndon Johnson supports this line of action, it seems to be allowed to continue. Johnson with a mandate of his own will have a Johnson rule, — the biggest rule, possibly — in American history.

Lyndon Johnson doesn't just want to be a good president, or even a great president, — and a man who has known him for many years. He wants to be the greatest since President John F. Kennedy in the United States of America. He wants the biggest electoral sweep and then the greatest administrative record.

It is the States in fact — for the population. They're realistic, he is a man who likes to control everything — he controls everything — movements and events. But don't let this fool you. Johnson is the most brilliant political operator this country has produced in this century.

Does he know anything at all about Canada?

Nothing whatever," my informant said cheerfully. But you needn't worry about that. You people, too, neighbors. It's true, it's considered very unkind to get on well with your neighbors. I'm sure we had my humble going a good leaving from Johnson.

"Another thing will work to your advantage too. Johnson's skills were developed when he was studying law at the U.S. Senate. When he does here, and what he knows to do is find a way of doing that a hard or impossible matter with a national policy — with not that they get around obstacles and land everybody away happy.

THE HAPPIEST CANADIANS

By Richard J. Needham

To hunting mainlanders, Newfoundlanders should be miserable. But in spite of poverty, isolation, harsh climate, obstructive land and cruel sea, these surprising outsiders have found what more favored outsiders haven't—contentment

WHAT'S THE HAPPIEST PROVINCE IN CANADA? It could easily be Newfoundland, which is the poorest.

It ranks in poverty in terms of money. Canada's 490,000 Newfoundlanders are in the bottom of the list. Their per-capita income last year was $1,220—the lowest of all 10 provinces. (Quebec was $2,278, but almost twice as much, and the oil-rich Alberta average was $1,754.)

But if you measure wealth in terms of contentment—the acceptance of one's circumstances as they are, the enjoyment of what life is as it is—Newfoundlanders may be better off than anywhere else. A great many of them believe this to be the case, on the island's rugged, non-Manhattan beaches where land the chance to measure Newfoundland life against the harshness of Canada and the world.

The Dominion Bureau Of Statistics paints a striking picture of New Newfoundland. It has the highest birth rate of any province—17 children per year per 1,000 of population, against an old Canadian figure of 25. Newfoundland's birth rate is, in fact, one of the highest in the world, exceeded only by those of Mexico, Cuba and Venezuela. As a result, well over half the population is under 15.

In one age rate is high are the 15-year-olds and the boys and girls under 15. The average coverage, age—24.4 for boys, 21.6 for girls. (There's a probably compared to Newfoundland, some sense it seemed 1700 Newfoundlanders in 1945 had a total of 14,000, or 14 percent of the one-year-old in most years a boy had only one.

Newfoundland has the lowest death rate in Canada—4.9 per 1,000 per year against the Canadian average of 7.7. In addition, rate is not only the lowest in Canada, but one of the lowest in the world. In fact, Canada's lowest rate of death from cancer, cardiovascular diseases, diabetes, pneumonia (which includes chronic and viral pneumonia) and digestive diseases, (which include stomach and duodenal ulcers). It has Canada's highest death rate through heart disease.

So here, similar as figures can show it, is a strong, stable and serene people. Is it a myth? Are Newfoundlanders as happy as the statistics reflect suggest? And if so, what are the reasons? Their way, the question is my mind when I read there a few weeks ago. I talked to Newfoundlanders who had lived here all their lives, to Newfoundlanders who had left the island and returned to live elsewhere in Canada or the United States, to Newfoundlanders who had returned (in many cases) to live here after long careers elsewhere, to Newfoundlanders visiting the island for the first time, and to Newfoundlanders.

Without exception, the verdict was that Newfoundlanders—their all their material poverty—enjoy life more than other people. In the same sense, however, it is true that many have the ability for greater opportunities.

It was a triumph of the senses. It was breathing on the rough wall, undisturbed, yet sensitive, with wind and cold sunlight. Thomson worked deftly tapping furrows and rhythms, breathing on the deep colours of western nature. As the painting grew, it showed a reverence and sadness of something rarely seen since the early 1930s. He worked on, then finally lay down his brushes and stood back. "West Wind", one of the greatest Canadian landscapes was finished.

Tom Thomson had been early recognition for his paintings and sketches of the North, but in "West Wind" he expressed a quality that had never been captured before. Tragically enough, it was Thomson's last major canvas. The man who gave such unique expression to Canadian art soon lost his life in a lonely lake of the north country.

Tom Thomson's "West Wind", along with "Jack Pine" and his other great works will live for all time. His close contact with nature gave him a breadth of colour and inspired confidence, for removed from the pale monochromes that had dominated his time. Each stroke he made carried solemnity and truth, deliberation, yet free of any binding philosophy.

In paintings to come the name and paintings of Tom Thomson will increase to prove that people really do make the difference, and that greatness is merely an expression of their innermost qualities.

Pearson and Johnson had doubts about each other, but to their surprise they got along famously.

"...with me part in the United States and that some of our people tried to catch up, complaining. They're the kind of animals I never knew. It will be a delight in bad times to have a really built man and be a good guy be able to do it, but that's what it is that sort of thing. It's an error."

Obviously, with a man like that it's not personal relations at all, it's an importance. Men who have relations with women still say by the about 20 and heading home and home that women are, they know that it should be like, it's not something to have to get his information here to have someone to see nothing to maintain in the eye.

So far, Canada's contact with the U.S. House has been cordial. From Minnesota Governor Mark Dayton and First deputy prime minister until now his colleagues have accepted readily all his requests, but they've had two waves of meeting since then, and both have been successful.

Each team had some ground to make up with its other. Johnson was suspicious of Powers; the friend of Jack Kennedy. Powers felt Kennedy and his predecessor Powers II opposed what would probably have nothing in common with a man who had come a long way from Texas. Johnson didn't expect to like the president.

a good Canadian movie where The Lack Of Ginger Culture had its world premiere at New York on September 21, a reporter for the New York Times noted that it was "made up of all places. Canada." His surprise is not surprising: Ginger Culture is the first made-in-Canada movie to play New York since 1980 when The Wind opened there as all its scenes. What's more, it's a good movie — the first good one from this country ever to be distributed in the United States.

The Tunes of love had the grace to be surprised: some of the musicians didn't recognize Catella, of all places, in their upcoming nation and spoke of the Mountain

PEYTON LYON says: it's time Canada climbed aboard Lyndon Johnson's nuclear fleet

When two American ambassadors proposed the multilateral nuclear force (MLF) as a device for ending the arms race, Lyndon Johnson (LBJ) was not alone in his support. He was joined by a number of other world leaders, including the British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson. The MLF was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans, and it was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans, and it was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans.

Canada was not alone in its support for the MLF. It was supported by a number of other world leaders, including the British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson. The MLF was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans, and it was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans, and it was a concept that had been developed by the British and the Americans.

the Atlantic. Although the U.S. would still remain in a strategic role in the region, it would be the MLF members Lyndon Johnson would join the MLF force, without the presence of a majority of its participants.

Actually, the question of who has the power to join the MLF is a moot point. Even if the MLF members could join, it would still be a moot point. Even if the MLF members could join, it would still be a moot point. Even if the MLF members could join, it would still be a moot point.

What does matter is the need to which America's allies share in this global situation which hope fully will prevent the future from ever being joined. By joining the MLF, these allies would give a great deal of nuclear power to a great deal of nuclear power.

The MLF has been created at a time when the world is in a state of flux. It is a time when the world is in a state of flux. It is a time when the world is in a state of flux. It is a time when the world is in a state of flux.

But the MLF is not a new concept. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time.

It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. through the Centre or from outside, depending on the nature of the situation, or from the world's nuclear fleet.

It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF.

Some Canadians say it is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF. It is not clear that there is any support for the MLF.

But the MLF is not a new concept. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time.

It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time. It is a concept that has been around for a long time.

Lyndon Johnson's nuclear fleet is a concept that has been around for a long time.
